

Media Contact:
Mikael Boyd
323.377.9035
mrb@influenceworldwide.com

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

WE'LL TAKE THE LUNA, PLEASE
NEW VACATION VILLAS THAT ARE TRULY FAMILY-SIZED

Guanacaste, Costa Rica - October 11, 2011 - The Green Season will soon relinquish its wet hold to make way for the High Season in Costa Rica, and emerging sustainable resort brand Kalia Modern Eco-Living is announcing new additions to accommodations at two of their four luxury eco-village resorts, called Emerald Woods and Ruby Sky. All Kalia resorts are located in the lush region of Guanacaste, in the Pacific northwest of this Central American hotspot.

The two villas, called Lunas, have four ample bedrooms, along with significantly increased common space over their existing counterparts. They will easily sleep 10, making them great for family vacations or reunions, wedding parties and retreats.

"These new villas are great because they are much larger," said Noam Halpert, CID at Kalia. "It's great to see these completed because I have always seen our villas as perfect tropical destinations to relax and unwind. Now we have some really good options for families and groups."

The Lunas are sleek contemporary structures with many commonly seen green building ideas like low impact foundations, solar features, green roofs and grey water systems. They also make sustainable choices available for guests in the form of carefully chosen products, locally sourced foods and Energy Star rated appliances. It is interesting to note that these villas are privately owned but rented and maintained by Kalia Eco-Resorts during the owners' absence. This is testament to the character of the company. It shows that homeowners have found Kalia's methods trustworthy and invaluable since day one.

The Lunas are already filling up with rental reservations for the upcoming season. A few returning guests enjoyed their past stays so much that they reported plans this year to spend their first few days at the Four Seasons, then spend the bulk of their stay - a week or more - at a Kalia villa. One repeat guest, Howard Van Emden, who has now vacationed with Kalia several times, said, "I love the villas because you get true privacy (compared to a busy hotel) without compromising on amenities. When you arrive, you're greeted by awesome views, your kitchen is already stocked, and the concierge is on hand to plan your trip activities."

Being at a Kalia villa is intended to cultivate a sense of seclusion and promote a commune with nature, but there is concierge service available 24/7 to put anything you could want during a vacation at your fingertips. "It's a very interesting concept, and well executed," Van Emden said. "You get privacy in this beautiful setting, but if you want a private chef or in-villa spa treatments, it's easy to arrange. If you want to schedule excursions or plan an event, you got it."

For more information on Kalia's Eco-village Resorts, visit <http://www.kaliavacations.com>. To schedule an interview or visit, please contact Influence Worldwide. And please, connect with us on Facebook and Twitter!

ABOUT KALIA MODERN ECO-LIVING:

Through artistic sustainable developments Kalia offers vacation travelers and homebuyers a luxury lifestyle in synergy with nature set against an extraordinary Costa Rican backdrop. Their eco-villages reveal the accessibility of ecologically conscious developments that are stylish and distinctly sexy. Kalia strives to show how artistry and innovation in home design can inspire each of us to transform the world beyond our doorstep with a spirit of stewardship.

Headquartered in Los Angeles, with offices in Santa Cruz, Costa Rica and Antwerp, Belgium, Kalia's four eco-villages are called the Ruby Sky, Emerald Woods, Black Beauty, and Diamond Cove Luxury Eco-Villages, containing approximately 1,016 acres / 412 hectares within four mixed-use master plan communities located in the verdant region of Guanacaste, Costa Rica.

#